Thanks, Jessica. I see your points and will discuss internally. All interviewees who are scheduled (or tentatively scheduled) have already received the question PDFs, but we will hone our approach. We'll also resolve our technical difficulties, so that I don't drop off. I'm sorry about that.

Thanks Bo.

Based on this interview, there could be some more follow-up questions. Most of their answers were said in the comments they provided to the CEC.

For example:

Question 1: We can assume now that no actual data will be provided. So...

- Are sales stable or increasing?
- Do you manufacturer more tub spout diverters than free-standing units ?
- How many of the models in the database are automatic reset diverters/manual reset diverters?
- Can we assume all models in the database are still being manufactured or sold?
- Can we assume there are 8 million tub spout diverters in California (1 for every home)? Does this sound reasonable?

Question 2 : Will there be a cost to the consumer? If so, by how much?

Question 3: What is the difference between diverter mechanisms with a lift-gate and those with a spring? Do you have any automatic reset diverters with positive shut-off features?

Question 9 can be removed or left last. They will repeat exactly what's in the docketed comments. PMI will make this the major topic.

Hope this helps.
